

Since the airwaves in this country are a public good, I believe that the FCC is obligated to provide more time for public comment on the proposed rule changes. The FCC's refusal to provide more time for public comment contributes to an erosion of public trust in the institution.

I oppose the proposed rule changes on the grounds that they will likely to lead to further media monopolization in a market that is already dominated by a handful of companies with little intention of serving the public interest. I believe that the FCC deliberately restricted time for public comment in order to advance rules that the public opposes.
